

NEA Clinic, Baptist Make Partnership Official

Baptist Memorial Health Care and Northeast Arkansas Clinic announced an agreement in which Baptist, one of the nation's largest not-for-profit health care systems, has acquired majority ownership of the joint venture operating Northeast Arkansas Medical Center, a 104-bed, all private room hospital located in Jonesboro, Ark.

Baptist has agreed to purchase the interests of NEA Medical Center owned by Community Health Systems Inc., giving Baptist Memorial 60 percent of the hospital's interests while NEA Clinic will continue to own the remaining 40

Baptist Going Tobacco Free Systemwide

Baptist Memorial hospitals, along with other hospitals in Tennessee and Mississippi, will implement a tobacco-free policy on all hospital campuses systemwide, beginning Nov. 15, the day of the Great American Smokeout.

Baptist Memorial hospitals systemwide are planning events in celebration of going smoke free.

Baptist Memorial Hospital-Memphis will host a tobacco-free ceremony at 10 a.m. and include memorial events for those who lost loved ones because of tobacco. Colleagues and guests can fill out a card listing those loved ones and then choose a colored marble to drop into a vase. After the ceremony, the vase of marbles will be placed on display in the lobby.

Baptist Memorial Hospital for Women and Baptist Memorial Hospital-North Mississippi are hosting receptions for colleagues from 2-4 p.m. At Baptist Women's Hospital, an additional reception will be from 10:30-11:30 p.m. for third shift colleagues.

Baptist Memorial Hospital-Collierville will be hosting a reception with Collierville Mayor Linda Kerley, who will present a city proclamation in honor of going ALL OUT. In addition, colleagues can register for a gift card to go toward the purchase of a turkey for

Colleagues Can Still Give to United Way

The fall fund-raising campaign for United Way of the Mid-South officially ended Nov. 2, but colleagues can still give to United Way until Dec. 31.

“United Way’s mission mirrors Baptist’s mission to the community,” said Kim Hunter, director in claims management who managed the campaign. “United Way of the Mid-South is a worthy cause, and they support many agencies that make a difference in the lives of children and families throughout the region.”

During the campaign, colleagues should have received an information packet that included a United Way donation form. If you would like to donate to United Way, you can turn that form into your manager or United Way team leader.

“Giving to United Way is an extension of Baptist’s three-fold ministry of Christ, preaching teaching and healing, in the communities we serve,” said Scott Fountain, senior vice president for Baptist Memorial Health Care and campaign chairman. “United Way’s efforts have a direct and tangible impact on the quality of life of those served by the agencies we fund.” Fountain also serves as Baptist’s representative on United Way of the Mid-South board of directors.

If you need a donation form or additional information, please contact Kim Hunter at 901-227-6662.

Press Ganey Chief Executive Visits Baptist

Melvin F. Hall, Ph.D., president and CEO of Press Ganey, recently visited leadership at Baptist as part of Baptist’s new partnership with the patient satisfaction measurement organization.

His presentation to the Baptist quality committee focused on what creates quality patient care: physician, employee and patient satisfaction.

“Each of the three is equally important when looking at quality of care,” said Dr. Richard Drewry, vice president and chief medical officer for Baptist Memorial Health Care. “I think our partnership with Press Ganey will allow us to move those indicators up.”

Through Press Ganey patient satisfaction survey results, leadership teams will be able to evaluate satisfaction in many care settings and then use Press Ganey’s tools and tactics to enhance or address areas of patient concern.

“Press Ganey gives us that comparative database to effectively evaluate how patients view our care,” Drewry said. “Then, we have the resources to do something to

Many at Baptist Served or Continue to Serve Country

Charles Becton still enjoys hunting when he's away from his job at materials management at Baptist Memorial Hospital-Memphis. It was something he did growing up on a farm in Arlington, Tenn.

This June he'll have spent 38 years with Baptist, most of which were at Baptist Memorial Hospital-Medical Center, a career that began three short months after he was discharged from the Army. Becton, who graduated from Douglass High in Memphis in 1966, was drafted and served in the Vietnam War during 1968.

"We couldn't keep the farm, so we moved to Hein Park," he said. "Right after my high school graduation, I was drafted and got to go to Fort Bragg for basic training."

Because of his shooting skills honed while growing up in a rural area, he was able to join a rifle company—and then spent time in the Philippines for specialized training before being stationed at Hue City via Cam Ranh Bay in what he and many other soldiers simply called, "The 'Nam."

Matthew Johnston, who works for Baptist's Center for Education and Organizational Development, is part of an Army engineering company that spent some time in 2005 deployed in Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Now a staff sergeant, Johnston said he went on two-to-three patrols per day in the region of Baquba, Iraq, where he was sent as part of a replacement unit stationed at Fort War Horse, now known as Camp Freedom I.

"I was just a member of a team there," Johnston said. "I did whatever needed to be done."

Bob Gwartney, director of ancillary services at Baptist Memorial Hospital-Collierville, was stationed at an Air Force base in California during the early 1970s. As a medical specialist, Gwartney investigated military crashes and performed other medical duties.

Although scheduled to be deployed, his orders to go to Vietnam were canceled.

According to the U.S. Department of Labor, more than 23 million men and women had some service in the U.S. Armed Forces as of August 2005. In addition, about 88 percent of male veterans of working age are employed. Becton, Johnston and Gwartney are only three of the many veterans who work in many different departments, from hospital administration to materials management and shared services for Baptist Memorial Health Care.

"We enjoy our freedom and way of life because of the men and women who served our country," said Stephen C. Reynolds, president and CEO of Baptist Memorial Health Care. "And we all should reserve a special place in our heart for those we know or work with who answered the call to serve their country."

Reynolds was a first lieutenant in the U.S. Army's Quartermaster Corps from 1968-1970.

Becton's tour began just in time for the Tet Offensive, a military initiative launched by the combined forces fighting Americans in South Vietnam. Tet, named because of the timing of the operation with the lunar new year, was designed to strike strategic parts of South Vietnam and end the war in a single blow.

"After Tet, things became very chaotic," Becton said. "I then was shifted from convoy escort to doing patrols."

And it was on one of those patrols

"The unit was like your family, and I wanted to be there to help them. I couldn't because I was on base duty. My memories of being there are both fond and at the same time, horrifying."

Charles Becton, Baptist colleague of 37 years that Becton was wounded by what he calls a "trailside explosive." The lead member of his unit stepped on an explosive and part of it tore through Becton's calf.

"I vaguely remember a noise, and then I woke up in the medevac," Becton said. "I just knew my leg was gone."

His hands slowly crept down his leg.

"I finally got down to the gash near my calf and then I passed out," he said. "Because of that, I finished my tour on base duty."

Charles Becton worked in materials management at Baptist Memorial Hospital-Medical Center before moving to Baptist Memorial Hospital-Memphis. Below, Matthew Johnston of Baptist's Center for Education and Organizational Development.

Johnston found out that prayer works.

"I was part of a prayer team that got together before and after patrols. Many times, we also prayed during patrols," he said. "I saw quite a few things happen that none of us could explain, like holes from shrapnel that showed it should have gone through one of us, but it didn't."

Johnston said the sand was like talcum powder, and it got into everything. When it got wet, it stuck to everything.

All three veterans learned distinct lessons from their time in the military.

For Gwartney, it was an opportunity to be a part of something that gave him more focus and opened opportunities.

"I'm not sorry I enlisted," he said. "Being in the Air Force motivated me in my career in a lot of ways."

Johnston said that in addition to prayer, he learned about trust.

"In our patrols, you had to trust who you were with," he said. "I saw in Iraq that people are people no matter where they're from, and trust has to be earned. I also learned we should see this through."

Becton, blessed that he didn't return to combat, didn't feel that way at the time.

"The unit was like your family, and I wanted to be there to help them," he said. "I couldn't because I was on base duty. My memories of being there are both fond and at the same time, horrifying."

the holidays.

Baptist Memorial Hospital-Union County plans to recognize colleagues who recently quit using tobacco. Colleagues can also sign up for drawings to win cold turkeys. In addition, the hospital colleagues can build their own sub sandwich and enjoy ALL OUT cake.

Baptist Memorial Hospital-Huntingdon is holding a "Crosses of Commemoration" ceremony in the cafeteria at 2 p.m. to recognize a loved one or friend who lost his or her life because of tobacco. Following the ceremony, events include turkey giveaways and a balloon release to honor the memory of a lost loved one.

Baptist Memorial Hospital-Tipton is planning to have a balloon release and refreshments.

Baptist Memorial Hospital-DeSoto will be recognized for going tobacco free with a proclamation from Southaven Mayor Greg Davis, and candy will be distributed throughout the day.

Baptist Memorial Hospital-Lauderdale will launch balloons during a celebration. Baptist Union City will host a reception for colleagues who successfully quit smoking. Both facilities will also hold a drawing for cold turkeys.

THE PRESIDENT'S CORNER

Stephen C. Reynolds, President & CEO,
Baptist Memorial Health Care

Who is Baptist?

Who makes up the 12,000 people we call colleagues? What are they like?

This organization comprises thousands of individuals, each with his or her own talents, personalities, insecurities, fears and strengths. But all of us want to help others. Each individual has answered a calling.

Combining individual personality traits creates a strong unit driven by the common goal of helping others – isn't that why we're here? That goal's reach becomes limitless because of the value each of us brings.

Without our individual talents, the reaches of our common goal may be compromised. Sometimes events or occurrences challenge our ability to contribute our talents. Other times call for a celebration of each colleague's unique personality.

As colleagues, we can recognize those differences between us and appreciate them. We then realize they are the necessary building blocks to the execution of our mission and ministry.

November 15, Baptist will be going tobacco-free at all our campuses. Many colleagues have participated in smoking cessation classes Baptist offered at no charge in an effort to not only present a healthy image, but offer opportunities for all of us to live healthier lives. In this case, many are sacrificing something they enjoy, but others are also offering support and encouragement because the value of one is just as important as the value of the group.

Veterans Day is Nov. 11, and a story in today's Leader highlights three of our colleagues who served their nation. Many of us have or are currently serving our nation in some capacity, and this devotion to our country and its people is probably the highest calling anyone could answer.

The times we live in call attention to those who choose to fight to preserve our way of life and the security of our families. Over the course of history, many have answered that call. I thank all of you who took your love for this country to its highest level.

Lastly, most of you are probably aware of Baptist extending our reach back into Arkansas by welcoming a new hospital into our organizational family. We recently went public, officially announcing that Jonesboro's Northeast Arkansas Medical Center is becoming NEA Baptist Memorial Hospital, partnering with NEA Medical Clinic.

I think this facility fits perfectly in the Baptist family, and I'm excited that we're given this opportunity to spread our ministry and mission into Arkansas. And Jonesboro is a great place as well – a city that is an epicenter of growth and development, yet still a safe and relaxed community.

Population figures for Jonesboro show an increase of nearly 10,000 people between the 1990 and 2000 censuses, and the city now has more than 60,000 residents.

NEA Clinic is the largest physician-owned multispecialty medical group practice in Arkansas, with more than 90 physicians practicing in 22 locations throughout the Craighead County area.

So who we are will change in the coming months.

Some of us will adjust to a decision that benefits the health of our patients, guests and fellow colleagues.

Others may have stories about their past you didn't know about, and those experiences frame what they contribute. Some are becoming new members of the Baptist family, and we welcome them and what they will contribute – because our mission to help and heal can only become stronger when we bring what is unique in each of us to a place where each of us strives for the same thing.

Vaughn Part of University of Memphis Art Exhibit

The Center for Research on Women at the University of Memphis is celebrating its 25-year anniversary with a special exhibit titled "Snapshots," which features photographs of women at work.

The group asked 25 influential women in Memphis to take a photograph, including Baptist Memorial Hospital for Women Administrator and CEO Anita Vaughn.

The free public exhibit will be 5-7 p.m. Nov. 10 at the University of Memphis Art Museum.

Vaughn's photograph features nurses working with a newborn in Baptist Women's Hospital's newborn intensive care unit.

Vaughn didn't plan the shot.

"I knew I had millions of options for depicting what we do here every day, but one day as I walked around it came to me what I should photograph," Vaughn said. "I just happened to be in the NICU, and when I saw the nurses go into action, I knew that was the photo."

For the exhibition, the center allowed each photographer to choose her own subject.

"I wanted to do it because every day, I see snapshot after snapshot of moments showing care-givers committed to helping others," Vaughn said. "Seeing how all those nurses and clinicians converged to stabilize that infant, it was a real moment of a team working solely for the benefit of a child."
